Attn.: Renata B. Hesse.

The subject settlement is one of the most disappointing things that government has done in a long time. It has no really bases in my opinion. If there is any monopoly it is government.

It appears to me that Netscape and other like companies are pursuing this issue to feather their own nest. It is of no benefit to the American citizens as far as I can see. In fact it is diverting many resources from one of the most creative companies to keep over zealous regulators and litigators from destroying it's ability to compete in the old fashion American way.

In my opinion what you, that is the justice department, are doing is about as un-American as it gets.
